

UNESCO and ASPBAE produce video on young rural women leading educational reform

International Women's Day 2018

8 March 2018

UNESCO and ASPBAE produced a video for International Women's Day 2018 focusing on young women's voices from the youth-led action research project.

The introduction of the video featured on the UIL website is reproduced here below -

“Women around the world face several obstacles to improving their lives. For young women from rural areas, these challenges are tied to socio-economic and cultural contexts. Often, their access to education and training opportunities is limited and they have to develop innovative ways to voice such concerns with an impact on an education policy that is guided by the fundamental principle of gender equality.

This is one reason why young rural women in India, Indonesia, and the Philippines are taking part in an action-research project developed by ASPBAE and the UNESCO Institute for Lifelong Learning (UIL). The project provides them with the skills and competencies needed to seek the needed evidence to inform educational reform in their communities. This initiative is enabling young women in rural areas to continue learning and improve their livelihoods and the health of their families.”
